President’s Letter
KRISTEN L. GREENAWAY

T’S BEEN ANOTHER TERRIFIC YEAR at your Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum! I very much hope you’ve had a chance to visit and experience what’s happening on campus sometime in the last 12 months.

Again, at your Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum.

The restoration of Edna Lockwood, the 1889-built, nine-log, last sailing bateye—in the world—continues to capture our imagination. You will never see the likes of this large-scale project again. Come experience this in person or via our constantly updated social media channels.

Speaking of social media, do you know that CBMM experiences more than 1,000,000 hits on our social media channels, per week?! We employ our social media to keep you informed and to help drive visitation. The beauty of CBMM is, once you’re here, you can put your smart device aside and enjoy a truly authentic and transformational experience (unless it’s also your camera!).

Our second free Community Day—when we throw open the gates for all—was another huge success, attracting well over 1,000 guests, who enjoyed free boat rides on Winnie Estelle, Old Point, Volunteer, and others. Giving back to our community is central to our vision.

Our Rising Tide After-School Boatbuilding Program has successfully completed its second year, and we are now well into the program’s summer camp activities—free for all youth participants.

Our new exhibition, Robert de Gast’s Chesapeake, opened in May. This show truly demonstrates CBMM’s growing reputation as a world-class maritime museum. On view for nearly a year, both the exhibition and the accompanying catalogue demonstrate the haunting beauty of this place, the Eastern Shore, as seen through de Gast’s eyes.

To cap it all off, as you’ll see from the enclosed Annual Report, we once again ended the fiscal year strongly. This enables us to reinvest in the museum to further increase the quality and range of programming on offer. For you, your family, and our community.

Once again, to each and every one of you who is compelled to invest in our mission and vision, thank you!

KRISTEN L. GREENAWAY

PS: I had the wonderful experience of discovering that a good many folks do read my letter. Of course Kenneth Grahame wrote The Wind in the Willows, and not A.A. Milne! Many thanks to those who contacted me to point out my error!
CBMM Board of Governors welcomes new members

THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS of the Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum has welcomed seven new members to the museum’s governing body and welcomed back two returning members.

Joining as new governors are David C. Blitzer, William C. Boicourt, Len N. Foxwell, Elizabeth C. Moose, David W. Reager, John L. Seidel, and Enos T. Throop, V. Returning for their second six-year term as governors are Bruce A. Ragsdale and Richard C. Tilghman.

Board officers for the 2017–2018 year are Chair James P. Harris, Vice Chair Diane J. Staley, Treasurer Richard J. Johnson, and Secretary Richard W. Snowdon.

New board member David Blitzer joined Hoon & Associates, LLC, in Chestertown, Md., in 2015. He has strong ties to the region resulting from time spent on his family farm in Kent County. Over the past 10 years, Blitzer has worked with numerous not-for-profit organizations active in the Bay area, including the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, The Conservation Fund, and the Chesapeake Conservancy, where he continues to serve in an advisory capacity as a member of the “Chesapeake Council.” He also currently serves as a member of the Board of Directors of the Eastern Shore Land Conservancy.

Bill Boicourt is professor emeritus at the University of Maryland Center for Environmental Science Horn Point Laboratory. His oceanographic interests are the circulation of continental shelves and estuaries, with particular interests in how these motions are driven by winds and by fresh water flowing off the land. Boicourt is a principal investigator and member of the Board of the Middle Atlantic Regional Association Coastal Ocean Observing System and a founding member of the Chesapeake Bay Observing System.

Len Foxwell currently serves as chief of staff for Maryland Comptroller Peter Franchot. Prior to joining the Comptroller’s Office in 2007, he served as assistant to Salisbury University’s president for government and community relations, and as director of government relations for the Greater Washington Board of Trade. Foxwell also served as director of Washington-area transit programs for the Maryland Department of Transportation from 1998–2002, and as press secretary for Governor Glendening’s successful 1998 re-election campaign.

In 2015, Foxwell received the Service to Society Award from Salisbury University in recognition of his contributions to the State of Maryland over the course of his public service career. In cooperation with the YMCA of the Chesapeake, he helped establish FC Tred Avon, a year-round youth soccer program for Mid-Shore children in families. He also is deeply involved with Easton Little League, where he currently serves as board treasurer and previously served as board president and a longtime baseball coach. He lives in Easton with his wife, Kerry, and their two children, Colleen and Darren.

Elizabeth Moose is vice president of Mid-Atlantic Realty Inc., a developer of free-standing drug stores, medical centers, and convenience stores in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia. Prior to forming Mid-Atlantic Realty in 1992, she was vice president of land... acquisition for BTR Realty, a publicly held company in Baltimore, Md.

Originally from Greensboro, N.C., Moose worked for Marriott Corporation in New York and Washington after graduation. After years of visiting CBMM and renting summer vacation homes, she built a house in Claiborne in 2007. Moose is chair of SOS Sink or Swim and has served on the board of the Classic Motor Museum. She also worked with the Claiborne Association to help save the former Methodist Church building, which has been converted to the Village Hall, and currently serves on the committee for Christmas in St. Michaels.

David Reager is a founding and managing partner of the law firm Reager & Adler, PC, in Camp Hill, Pa., supervising the real estate, business law, and estate planning practice areas. He formed the firm in 1979 after serving for five years as an assistant attorney general with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Reager was chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Fredricksen Library and currently serves on the boards of the Center for Independent Living of Central Pennsylvania and the Camp Hill Community Foundation. When not working, he enjoys sailing, painting and gardening.

John Seidel is director of the Center for Environment & Society and the Lammot du Pont Copeland associate professor of Anthropology & Environmental Studies at Washington College in Chestertown, Md. Prior to joining the faculty of Washington College in 1998, he worked in the private sector as the lead underwater archaeologist for R. Christopher Goodwin & Associates, one of the largest cultural resource management firms in the nation. He also has taught at Rutgers University and the University of Maryland College Park, and his work has taken him from the U.S. to the Middle East and Central and South America.

Seidel is a past president of the Maritime Archaeological & Historical Society and has served on the Chestertown Historic District Commission and the Maryland Historical Trust Board of Trustees. He lives in Chestertown with his wife, Liz, and enjoys boating, SCUBA diving, travel, reading, and music.

Enos Throop spent most of his career working in the Baltimore and Washington, D.C., areas as an investment management professional. He held the positions of research analyst and portfolio manager for Johnston, Lemon & Company, was the director of equity for the Maryland State Retirement System, vice president for Legg Mason Investment Management, and director of investments for the United Mine Workers Health and Retirement Funds. As its first employee and chief investment officer, he started a $20 billion trust at the National Railroad Retirement Investment Trust (NRRIT). He retired from NRRIT in 2006, at which time the assets in the trust’s portfolio had increased to $36 billion.

Throop and his wife, Muriel, have owned property on the Eastern Shore just outside of St. Michaels for almost 35 years. They now live there full time.

CBMM and Historic St. Mary’s City celebrate partnership

LOCAL AND STATE OFFICIALS visited the Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum’s St. Michaels campus Friday, July 7, to celebrate a new partnership between CBMM and the Historic St. Mary’s City Commission. Speakers at the event included Adelaide Eckardt, Maryland state senator; Johnny Mautz, Maryland state delegate; Jeannie Haddaway-Riccio; deputy chief of staff for Governor Larry Hogan; and Father William George, board chairman of the Historic St. Mary’s City Commission.

The two organizations will pool their expertise to design and construct the next iteration of Maryland Dove, a replica of the late 17th century trading ship that brought the first settlers to what is now Maryland.

“This is a unique opportunity, a very historic opportunity as we bring together two of our wonderful highlights, both from the Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland,” Eckardt said. “We work together with a lot of initiatives but this is a new pioneering ground where we bring together our deep, rich history, our cultural background, and our trades and crafts. We’re going to be very excited to see how it moves forward and to be a model, to be the template, for where we want go in the future with Maryland.”

Built in a shipyard near Cambridge, Md., in 1978, Maryland Dove is owned by the state of Maryland and operated and maintained by the Historic St. Mary’s City Commission.

“HSMC and CBMM are natural partners in this project,” said Regina Faden, executive director at Historic St. Mary’s City. “It fulfills both our missions and delivers a new Dove to tell the story of (early) Maryland.”

Maryland Dove is Historic St. Mary’s City’s floating ambassador and one of its most popular exhibits. The ship design is based on the original Dove that sailed to the Maryland colony with the Ark in 1634. The Dove was a small ship used in shallow waterways along the coast while the first colony and capital was being established.

“This is a true Maryland project, and one we’re thrilled to be involved with,” said CBMM President Kristen Greenaway.

Additional photos from the celebration can be found at bit.ly/DoveAnnouncement. To learn more about Maryland Dove, visit bit.ly/marylanddove. For more information, visit cbmm.org or call 410-745-2916.

Head down Mill Street to the Collections Building on just about any Thursday, and you’ll find a familiar sight—Ellen and Norman Plummer. Where exactly they’ll be varies from week to week—at a table researching the archives, behind a desk logging information in a computer, or deep in the collection itself examining one of more than 70,000 objects—but they’ll be there.

Volunteers since 1988, the Plummers are a staple of that building. They worked in two earlier, smaller Collections Buildings, too; each has been larger than its predecessors.

“We’ve seen the CBMM collection grow, and the museum and the programs at the museum … especially programs for young people, which is great,” Ellen says.

By the time Norm and Ellen decided to become volunteers—something they did after both retired from their respective careers on April Fool’s Day—they were already familiar with CBMM. Norm first became a member after sailing to St. Michaels in 1965 and docking next to a kickoff party for the newly created museum.

“My late wife and I sat there in our boat and finally got in our bunks and listened to the music until we fell asleep,” Norm says. “That kind of convinced us that we should sign up and become members.”

As for Ellen, joining CBMM was part of the package when she married Norm in 1972. For 40 years, the couple lived on the Wye River, a relatively short drive; they’ve since moved to Chestertown, a much longer one.

The Plummers have made major contributions to CBMM since becoming volunteers. Ellen’s first job was to find photos for From a Lighthouse Window, CBMM’s award-winning cookbook. She later helped find pictures for At Play on the Bay, Oystering, Steamboat, and War of 1812 exhibitions, all projects she enjoyed.

“It was great fun, it really was, doing that digging and finding images that tell a story,” says Ellen, whose focus of late has been cataloging thousands of photos CBMM acquired from the collection of Robert Burgess, the late curator of The Mariners’ Museum.

Norm has written extensively for CBMM, authoring numerous articles for the former CBMM magazine The Weather Gauge and three books — Lambert Wickes: Pirate or Patriot, Maryland’s Oyster Navy: The First Fifty Years, and Beacons of Hooper Strait. He also served on CBMM’s Board of Governors for 12 years, and is now emeritus.

After nearly 30 years of dedicated service, the Plummers have a number of stories and favorite memories of CBMM. They speak especially fondly of the people they’ve worked with over the years, and the feelings are mutual.

“It would be difficult to overstate the depth of Ellen and Norman Plummer’s contributions over nearly 30 years of volunteering. The museum’s collections are better cataloged and researched because of their diligent work,” says CBMM Chief Curator Pete Lesher. “But above all, they are simply delightful people, and I am privileged just to be able to break for lunch with them.”
Photographer Robert de Gast praised the Hoopers Island bridge tender in Western Wind, Eastern Shore, his 1975 book based on a solo cruise circumnavigating the Eastern Shore. “I … carefully motored out of Fishing Creek harbor, past Wroten Island, to the bridge at Honga. The bridge tender was a pro. I didn’t even get a chance to blow my horn. Nor did I have to slow down—the bridge was in the right position at the right time.”

Two swing bridges once connected the Upper Hoopers Island community of Fishing Creek and the Middle Hoopers Island community of Hoopersville to the rest of Dorchester County and the Eastern Shore. The upper bridge, completed by the state in 1934, created a 28-foot-wide opening for boat traffic passing through Fishing Creek and was replaced in 1992 by a fixed, concrete span.

The county bridge connecting to Middle Hoopers Island is the stuff of legend. Built in 1941, the 1,178-foot-long single-lane wooden bridge had a wider platform in the middle so that a car could pull over to allow another to pass. The wooden decking shook any vehicle crossing it, earning it the sobriquet, “the clatteringest old bridge,” in author Tom Horton’s Bay Country.

Horton noted that Robert Meekins, the longtime bridge tender at Hoopersville, opened for marine traffic “sunup to sundown, seven days a week, crab season, oyster season … straining at the long, iron crank rod.” Later, the county electrified the pivot mechanism for the 50-foot opening span, “so that all Meekins had left to do was to push a button.”

Former Dorchester County Commissioner Tom Flowers recounted in Shore Folklore that as the creosoted timber bridged aged, “it could not be trusted to hold a school bus. Instead the children were vanned across in small groups to be loaded aboard their buses.” Flowers noted that a bridge replacement, estimated at $500,000 in 1973, had risen to $3.5 million; with federal funding came federal standards for lane widths, concrete construction, and erosion control that inflated costs for a bridge serving 250 vehicles per day. Flowers was invited to give the invocation at the bridge dedication on September 6, 1980:

“Father, today we are gathered here to dedicate a bridge that is a monument to man’s stupidity, a monument to man’s waste, a monument to government interference and inefficiency. … We ask our great Creator and Father to bless this bridge, our families, our friends, and our visitors who will use this structure to meet their needs, knowing that wind and wave and tide are daily at work destroying that which has been built.” After a brief stunned silence, the ceremony continued.

The local newspaper editorialized, “the Creator of the universe, who knows a thing or two about public works on a large scale, may have been momentarily taken aback by the opening prayer which Commissioner Flowers offered at Hoopers Island the other day. But no thunder roared and no lightning bolts flew, a possible sign that the Master Builder enjoys a good joke and has enough compassion to envelop bureaucrats, engineers, and politicians as well as tax payers.” The Baltimore Sun likewise carried the story, which went national. Flowers was not invited to any subsequent state highway dedication ceremonies.

A drawbridge lantern was a specialty item in the marine supply catalogs of the early 20th century. It was relatively large at 11½ inches square and 22 inches high, including the chimney that vented fumes from its kerosene lamp. The lantern held two flat panes of red glass on opposite sides of its galvanized metal frame; the other two sides held green panes. When the swing bridge stood open, the green showed boat traffic that it was safe to proceed, and the 90-degree turn of the bridge turned the lantern with it to show red when closed.

This drawbridge lantern, no longer needed when the swing bridge was replaced by a fixed span, was obtained from the estate sale of a marine police officer. It is not clear which of the two Hoopers Island swing bridges it once marked, but in either case, it has a rich story. It is now in CBMM’s collection and exhibited in Robert de Gast’s Chesapeake.

THE CANNED TOMATO INDUSTRY OF MARYLAND, 1880–1950
by Kate Livie

CONTENTS 5 LBS. 6 OZ.
Red is the color of deep Chesapeake summer—the brick red of steamed crabs, piled high on the picnic table, or the rich, luminous red of tomatoes, heavy on the vine. The Bay’s bounty on the water and on the land is at its pinnacle in the warmest months of the year, and for a century, these summertime staples fueled the Chesapeake’s seasonal economy. But crabs (and the lumps of packaged crabmeat they provide) are really a Johnny-come-lately to the Bay’s industries. Long before refrigeration made crab packing possible in the early 20th century, the 19th century invention of canning allowed farmers around the Chesapeake to grow great crops of ripe, glowing tomatoes and preserve their quintessential summertime taste indefinitely.

Sealed in cans and shipped nationally across the new rail lines of the mid-19th century, tomatoes were the original seasonless food—a concept that would revolutionize how Americans ate and subsequently set the stage for today’s global food system. From the 1860s onward, the farmers and packinghouses of the Chesapeake’s arable landscape worked hard to oblige the public’s clamor for canned tomatoes. Just as oysters fed the Chesapeake’s seasonal winter economy, so too the mighty summer tomato built the fortunes of entire 19th century communities, shaped the lives of immigrants, sharecroppers, and migrant workers, and defined a regional and national cuisine. And, like the oyster, today’s tomato economy is but a pale shade of its former glory.

Baltimore’s massive canned oyster industry paved the way for tomatoes. The first half of the 19th century saw the establishment of the city’s B&O Railroad, the introduction of the French “canning” method of food preservation, and the development of large vessels for harvesting oysters under sail. Each of these three innovations allowed Chesapeake businesses to harvest, pack, and ship more oysters than ever before. Once the infrastructure was established, it was an easy transition in the summer months to canning the region’s abundant produce. Early advertisements show pioneering 1850s Baltimore packers like Kensett & Co. proudly promoting their full line of “hermetically-sealed oysters, fruits etc.”

These canned goods were immediately popular—in fact, tomatoes were proving a bit of a 19th century fad. “In taking retrospect of the last 18 years,” one writer in 1858 said of the tomato, “there is no vegetable on the catalogue that has obtained such popularity in so short a period … in ten years, almost every variety of pill and panacea was extract of tomato. It … is now cultivated the length and breadth of the country.” Indeed, oysters, peaches, and tomatoes had transcended their place as seasonal delicacies—they were the fuel for westward expansion, nonperishable meals distributed on rail lines that now stretched across the entire continental United States. Especially after the Civil War, as the American population grew and urbanized, fewer people had easy access to farm-fresh produce—making canned goods an even more widespread and essential alternative.

To meet the insatiable public appetite for an endless-summer bounty, rural packinghouses in Cambridge, Solomons, Crisfield, Salisbury, and other small tidewater towns followed Baltimore’s lead in the second half of the 19th century, capitalizing on hundreds of miles of farmland in close proximity. Some of these packers, like Phillips Packing Company in Cambridge, swelled in size and production—eventually, Phillips would expand into nine factories employing 2,000 workers as Cambridge became “the tomato canning capital of the world.” Others, like the 60-plus small mom-and-pop canneries of Caroline County, or the eight packinghouses in St. Michaels, serviced mostly local farms that transported their ripe crop to market in buyboats, schooners, or farm carts. In an industry focused intently on one crop, tomato packing accommodated remarkable variety in the sizes and locations of the businesses and communities it supported. This flexibility of scale made tomato packing practically ubiquitous—for three generations, almost every Chesapeake town or city had a cannery flooded all summer long with vibrant rivers of round, ripe tomatoes.

Although canneries were distributed thickly across the Bay, there was little regional variation in how they were packed and processed. A Baltimore Sun article described the technique in 1922 at Phillips Packing Company: “Wagons are driven up to the end of a machine in a tunnel-like casing. The ‘tomats’ are dumped from the basket to a perforated moving platform. They look very pretty as they move into a steaming wash. After the bath, they get a boiling before a cold plunge helps their agony.” For the final stages of the process, “the tomatoes are dumped into wire baskets and given to skinners. After skinning, another... cooking comes, then cans waiting in a long row. Cans are sealed as they pass by. When they are labeled and boxed the operation is complete.” At each stage in the process—picking, transporting, steaming, boiling, skinning, canning, labeling, and boxing—workers trundled the tomatoes along, representing hundreds of hands, each taking full opportunity of the seasonal windfall.

On Maryland’s Eastern Shore, that labor force was largely African-American. Whether working in the fields to harvest the fruit—130 bushels per picker per day was a good average—or taking a seasonal job in the canneries, it was a way to earn some ready fast cash. The average for a peeler in the 1920s was 5 cents a bucket, and a skilled peeler might earn as much as $5 per day while tomatoes were in season. An African-American peeler, Gladys Jenkins, recalled of her time at Trappe’s Defender packing company, “I always looked forward to tomato season, it was a time I could make a little money.” Interestingly, canneries were integrated environments—a rarity in the Jim Crow-era South—and white and black packinghouse workers experienced a rather remarkable, if short-lived, egalitarianism during the summertime tomato canning season.

In Baltimore, the tomato canning industry's labor force was primarily made up of recent immigrants—who often worked in appalling conditions. Unlike the small, isolated communities of the Eastern Shore, where community scrutiny and limited labor pools held canneries to fair practices, in the eyes of unscrupulous Baltimore cannery owners, German and Italian and Irish packinghouse workers were endlessly replaceable. In 1909, early children’s rights activist Lewis Hine documented the conditions endured by immigrant laborers as young as five years old. He reported that, “on every hand, one can see little tots toting boxes or pans full of beans, berries or tomatoes, and it is self-evident that the work is too hard. There are machines which no young person should be working around. Unguarded belts, wheels, cogs and the like are a menace to careless children.”

The reach of the packinghouse extended beyond the workday for many cannery laborers. Migrants, old and young alike, were offered free housing by the packinghouses, but the conditions were squalid, rowdy, and cramped with workers of all ages and backgrounds—hardly an environment conducive to a happy childhood. As one mother confessed to Hine, “It’s no place for children. They learn too much.” Now landlords as well as employers, the canneries could then evict workers at will—a powerful tool to control and subdue their beleaguered labor force.

City canneries found other creative ways to exploit their employees. Workers at city packinghouses often received their wages as tokens—a system used for tallying production at other packinghouses that was used as scrip.
currency by suspect canneries. Tokens could only be redeemed for supplies and food at company-owned stores, where, as Hine reported, “exorbitant prices were charged for poor food.”

The injustices leveled at the labor force weren’t restricted to canneries. As the United States became increasingly industrialized in the early 20th century, workers nationwide began to unionize, hoping to negotiate better pay and working conditions as a united front. The impact of unionizers was felt most famously in Cambridge during the summer of 1937, where the Phillips Packing Company dominated the city’s economy and culture.

The Congress of Industrial Organizers, which organized workers into single unions, regardless of race or sex, had been clandestinely organizing at the integrated Phillips. But it was the Phillips management’s announcement on June 23 to reduce the workforce—the Depression had taken its toll on the canneries throughout the state—that struck the match of uprising. The workers struck, swarming the streets of Cambridge 1,000 strong to rally support. Black and white workers alike overturned trucks of tomatoes, spilling their crimson contents, and threw rocks at produce truck drivers who attempted to cross picket lines. The next day, James McKnight, a black striker who had been arrested, was freed by a mob of white picketers at the Cambridge jail demanding his release. The police, hoping to avoid further violence, acquiesced. Although the Phillips strike was ultimately unsuccessful—it would take decades before hourly wages or the length of the work week were negotiated by a union—it marked the beginning of union activity in Maryland tomato canneries and the push toward workers’ rights in packinghouses.

The last great era of tomato canning in Maryland was World War II, which swelled packinghouse production with the armed forces’ enormous demand for packaged food. “There is a need for every case of tomatoes and peas that can be packaged in 1942,” intoned a representative from the War Production Board, and 35 percent of Maryland’s... tomato production was set aside solely for government ration contracts. During a period when most able-bodied men were at war, this demand for increased production understandably created a labor shortage—one that was met, for the first time, with women workers and foreign immigrant labor. As the war continued, some tomato farms and packinghouses even used prisoners of war to meet their labor needs. Talbot County’s Defender Packing Company, for example, used 25 German prisoners to help tend crops in the sun-scorched tomato fields.

World War II brought acclaim to local tomato canneries, like Harrison & Jarboe in Sherwood, which won a much-coveted “A” award from the United States War Food Administration for feeding troops abroad and civilians at home during the war. But the halcyon days of high production and heady revenues for tomato farmers, packers, and producers were not to last. Post-World War II saw the rise of the frozen food industry—a transition that required costly infrastructure upgrades few small canneries could afford to make. As the riverside packinghouses began to gradually shutter throughout the Bay’s small towns, California’s growing produce industry slowly took the place of the Chesapeake’s former titanic tomato production.

In response, many of the fields once dedicated to tomatoes along the Bay’s waterways began to bloom instead with corn, soybeans, or wheat—the beginning of the modern Chesapeake agricultural system still in place today.

For almost a century, tomatoes dominated the Chesapeake’s summer economy, supporting hundreds of thousands of Marylanders from field hands to packinghouse owners. In towns throughout the tidewater, the season was synonymous with cast-off packinghouse tomato skins bobbing on lazy rivers and pickers’ straw hats bent over plants laden with sun-warmed fruits. The taste of the Bay in July, canned and preserved indefinitely, was more than a food fad—it was the beginning of the “seasonless” global produce we see on display in every modern grocery store. It is ironic, then, that beyond the recollections of old-timers, little has been preserved from this once-mighty tomato preservation industry beyond the labels in CBMM’s collection, still mouth watering in rich, brilliant red.
Edna E. Lockwood progress continues

Work continues on the historic restoration of 1889 bugarie Edna E. Lockwood, with each of the nine logs comprising her new hull pinned together and shipwrights moving on to fitting chunks in her bow and stern over the summer.

It was a busy spring in the Boatyard, with the hull flipped via crane in April and the two wing logs pinned to the rest of the assembled hull in May. In September, Edna’s topside will be moved to the new hull so shipwrights can begin to marry the two, an important step in the restoration project. New stems, hatches, and additional structures will be installed this fall, and sails will be sent out to have new ones made.

The team is restoring CBMM’s queen of the fleet and National Historic Landmark Edna Lockwood by replacing her nine-log hull, in adherence to the Secretary of the Interior’s Standards for Historic Vessel Preservation. Shipwright apprentices working on the project are generously supported by the Seip Family Foundation and RPM Foundation. All work takes place in full public view through 2018, when Edna will be placed on the marine railway and launched at CBMM’s OysterFest in October.

Floating Fleet

CBMM’s floating fleet gets summer spruce-up

Under the guidance of Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum Shipwright James Del Aguila, the maintenance season for CBMM’s floating fleet of historic vessels was successful again this year, with all work done in full public view.

As is typical for the season, work commenced with the most-used and popular vessels, including 1920 buyboat Winnie Estelle, which received some system upgrades and a fresh coat of paint, thanks to the generosity of CBMM’s dedicated volunteers and staff. Smith Island crab scraping replica Volunteer and crab dredger Old Point each received minor carpentry repairs and a fresh coat of paint in advance of the busy season.

Skipjack Rosie Parks was next up on the railway, where a leak in the forward staving was eliminated, and her Cummins-powered pushboat was recommissioned. Additionally, a rebuilt transmission was installed on draketail Martha.

CBMM offers summer on-the-water opportunities, including Miles River cruises aboard Winnie Estelle, and small craft rentals of CBMM-constructed sailing vessels, rowing vessels, and wooden kayaks. Throughout the year, CBMM also sells boats through its Charity Boat Donation Program.

CBMM’s floating fleet is part of the largest and most important collection of Chesapeake watercraft in the world, with 92 vessels built from the 1880s to the 1980s, including wooden sail, power, and row boats. All of the region’s waterfowling boats are represented, along with most of the major types used in the region’s fisheries and a good sample of recreational watercraft. CBMM’s boatyard maintains the floating fleet in working condition, and stewards all objects in CBMM’s watercraft collection.

“Having retired in 1996, I searched for the best way to maintain some income while providing a legacy gift to CBMM. A Charitable Remainder Trust helped me do just that. Over the years, Nancy and I have added to the trust, receiving tax benefits along the way and making our ultimate gift to CBMM even greater. We are very proud of the continued commitment to preservation and the growth we’ve seen at CBMM since our initial involvement nearly 25 years ago and am delighted to help provide for its future.”

ROBERT DE GAST’S CHESAPEAKE
Open through April 2018

Robert de Gast’s photographs from the late 1960s and ’70s documented the Chesapeake’s oystering industry, shorelines, and lighthouses at a watershed moment, both for the Bay and for photography. Deftly incorporating modern abstract elements into images that conveyed grit, humor, and atmosphere, de Gast masterfully represented the last days of the Chesapeake’s maritime golden age. This exhibition features masterpieces selected from more than 10,000 images in CBMM’s de Gast collection.

LOG CANOE RACING: PHOTOGRAPHS BY MORRIS ELLISON
Open through Sept 2017

This exhibition displays the works of local photographer Morris Ellison, as he showcases the Chesapeake Bay’s iconic sailing log canoes. Ellison prints some of his canoe photos in sepia tone, giving them the feel of an old photograph, which he feels conveys a timeless quality to the classic log canoes.
Participants in CBMM’s Rising Tide After-School Boatbuilding Program carry Cattail, a railbird skiff they built, down the dock to launch her at Community Day in May 2017.
A Message from the Board

BY JAMES P. HARRIS, 2017–2018 CHAIR

As a member and supporter of the Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum, you must be very proud of the progress your museum has made. CBMM is making a significant impact on our community, while also being recognized as a world-class maritime museum. The staff, with the support of the board, is extending and deepening the impact of CBMM’s mission. Innovations by staff to attract visitors and students have resulted in new and upgraded exhibitions, improved and expanding programs for students, and involvement in our working boatyard.

Hopefully you have witnessed the buzz in the Boatyard with the rebuild of the historic Edna Lockwood. This work is remarkable, and it’s been fascinating to watch its evolution from nine giant logs to a new hull for this treasured vessel. It is truly a once-in-a-lifetime activity that is followed far and wide. Follow her progress in person or online at ednalockwood.org.

Just as special is the impact your museum is having by educating children. As a major destination for K–12 field trips, CBMM augments their core curriculum. Students learn about the economics of the crabbing industry, the ecology of the Bay, wooden boatbuilding, and in general help preserve the rich heritage of the Chesapeake Bay. CBMM’s Education Department has grown the number of student visits 31% to more than 4,600 during the past school year, on the way to our goal of 7,000. What’s even more telling is that the growth in student impact is outside our traditional local area, thus extending our geographical impact.

The after-school program for middle schoolers—Rising Tide—just finished its second successful year. Our objective is to help develop young people’s applied and social skills using boatbuilding as a vehicle. The Boatyard is a beehive of activity four days a week after school, with this program underway in the presence of role models working on larger wooden boats. Rising Tide’s first boat, Cattail, was launched in May to the applause of thrilled parents and the many supporters who attended Community Day. The pride shown on the faces of these young boatbuilders said it all.

Financially, CBMM is in very good shape; eight years of positive operating results have helped improve the balance sheet while still increasing the impact of our innovative programs. Your support of The Annual Fund, your membership, and your participation in the Boating Party have all helped make this possible. Continuing to find innovative ways to attract visitors and students is also key to the future.

While the comprehensive campaign is well underway, we still need to work on securing CBMM’s future by growing the endowment. There are many opportunities to endow long-term endeavors such as education programs and Rising Tide. Our Planned Giving program has been launched and is another way that you can help secure CBMM’s future. The Development Office would be happy to discuss options with you.

In the longer term, we have many physical facility needs and ambitions; an initiative to develop a master plan is underway to help guide and prioritize the future development of our campus.

In summary, there’s been huge progress, and there’s an ambitious vision for the future.

On behalf of the board, staff, and volunteers, thank you for your loyalty and ongoing support; you have helped make CBMM a success, and we look forward to your continuing involvement.
We extend our deepest gratitude to our donors for gifts received between March 1, 2016 and February 28, 2017. It is only through the generosity of our friends and supporters that CBMM can fulfill its mission and impact lives by igniting a spark of interest and passion for the Chesapeake Bay and its heritage and culture. Gifts of $101 or more to The Annual Fund, Boating Party, Comprehensive Campaign, collection, endowment, pre-Boating Party auction, sponsorships, or otherwise restricted are listed in the following pages. Please see our Annual Report online at cbmm.org for an inclusive list of all donors and CBMM members. Every gift is greatly appreciated!

Gifts to the Collection

CBMM’s impressive collection of more than 70,000 Bay-related artifacts and archival material depends in large part on the generosity of individuals. This past year, we received 107 objects, 934 photographs, five manuscript collections, and 92 volumes for the Library. We are enormously grateful to the donors who contributed to CBMM’s collection. Highlights are shown here.

1. Painting, Fishermen and Seine Reel, near Leonardtown, Md, Gift of Pete Lesher.

CBMM is grateful to the following friends who donated a variety of items in the past year, including artifacts, models, paintings, ships' plans, photographs, books, manuscripts, and other Chesapeake Bay-related items:

On June 15, 2017, the Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum recognized a dedicated team of more than 385 volunteers aboard Patriot for their combined 27,552.5 hours of service to CBMM over the past year. Several volunteers were recognized by CBMM for their work in boat restoration and maintenance, boat donations, buildings and grounds, education, exhibitions, Museum Store, and volunteer programming. The river cruise reception was generously sponsored by Patriot Cruises of St. Michaels, Md., and Garden & Garnish of Trappe, Md.

Special recognition was given to volunteers with the highest hours of cumulative service, including John Hawkinson with 10,000 hours; Ellen Plummer, Norman Plummer, and Mike Sweeney with 8,000 hours; Paul Ray with 7,000 hours; Lloyd Devigne, Roger Galvin, and Don Parks with 5,000 hours; and Jerry Friedman and Bob Petizon with 4,000 hours. Many other volunteers were recognized for reaching several milestones of 100 hours and above for their CBMM volunteer service.

“The engagement and service from our volunteers is such an extraordinary part of what makes CBMM a very special place to visit,” said CBMM President Kristen Greenaway. “The effort our volunteers put forth each and every day to ensure a great experience for our guests is quite remarkable.”

CBMM is always looking for volunteers to help throughout various areas of its operations, including front desk assistants, interpretive educators, festival helpers, buildings and grounds assistants, and more.

For more information, contact CBMM Volunteer & Education Coordinator Allison Speight at aspeight@cbmm.org or 410-745-4941, or visit cbmm.org/support/volunteer.
